THE IDEA

A window is a threshold, not a hole in a wall.

A window is a paradox made architectural: an opening that is also not an opening. It is the negotiated settlement between our need to be enclosed and our refusal to be sealed off. The wall says no. The window says no, but.

It installs the day inside the house. It lets weather become spectacle instead of consequence. It holds the world at exactly the distance we can bear.

Ventino is not in the business of glass and frames. Ventino is in the business of the threshold — the finely-calibrated membrane between sanctuary and world.

Every mark, every word, every product exists on that line. It is the place where inside and outside argue, and reconcile.

"A wall keeps the world away.
A window keeps the world — at exactly the distance we can bear."

What Ventino stands for

Mission

To craft doors and windows that hold the threshold with poise — letting people stay enclosed without being entombed, connected without being exposed.

Vision

To be the name spoken when a home is meant to feel considered: the quiet benchmark for architectural doors and windows.

Promise

Every opening we make is a negotiated settlement — sanctuary on one side, the living world on the other, calibrated to the millimetre.

Voice

Ventino speaks the way a window behaves: it shows, it does not shout. Confident without boasting. Plain with homeowners, precise with architects. It leads with the feeling — light, calm, shelter — and lets the specification follow. It never sells fear; it offers poise.

THE MARK

The threshold mark

The aperture

An upright opening, tuned between door and window. It reads as threshold first.

The inner field

A field set apart from the ground — light implied, on the other side. Never drawn.

The sill

The heaviest line in the mark. The membrane; the line the world stops at.

The glint

A single warm point — the trace of life on the threshold. Used once, never repeated.

Variants & clear space

PRIMARY

REVERSED

MONO — BLACK

MONO — WHITE

Clear space

Keep a margin equal to the height of the sill-to-head aperture clear on every side. Nothing — type, image edge, or fold — enters that field.

Never

- ✗ Stretch, rotate or skew the mark
- ✗ Add shadows, gradients or outlines
- ✗ Recreate the wordmark in another typeface

Minimum size

Primary lockup: 28 mm wide in print, 150 px on screen.
Below this, use the mark alone — the mullion drops away and it still holds.

- ✗ Recolour outside the brand palette
- ✗ Place on a busy or low-contrast image
- ✗ Crowd the mark inside its clear space

COLOUR

A palette rooted in shelter

Deep, muted greens — sanctuary tones, not bright eco-green. A single warm accent, used as sparingly as the glint on the mark. Light is a near-white, never pure white.

Primary. Frames, headlines, dark grounds.

Secondary green. Supporting surfaces.

Accent green. Rules, descriptors, detail.

Soft green. Text on dark, quiet fields.

Warm neutral. Earth, timber, depth.

The glint. Used once, never as a field.

Paper / light. The primary background.

The inner field. Panels, soft blocks.

Proportion · Greens and light carry the brand. Brass never exceeds five percent of any composition — it is a glint, not a field.

Regular · Medium · SemiBold A high-contrast display serif — the difference between an atelier and a merchant.

SECONDARY · CAPTIONS, SPECIFICATIONS, UI, FINE PRINT

A neutral sans handles the functional register — technical specifications, dimensions, legal lines. It never competes with the serif; it is the quiet hardware behind the door.

SPECIFICATION & FINE PRINT

Holding the line

Every application of this identity is measured against one sentence:

A threshold held with poise — an opening that protects,
a frame around the light, calm enough to stay closed
and confident enough to open.

Frame the void

Let the considered emptiness do the work. What is not there carries the meaning.

Imply the light

No sunbursts, no glow. Light is a shift of proportion, a brighter field beyond.

Restraint is the finish

The luxury is in what is left out — the same discipline a window itself embodies.
